

Become a Graduate Economist with ABARE

Applications for our 2009 graduate intake are NOW OPEN
Find out more at www.abare.gov.au

The Australian Bureau of Agricultural and Resource Economics (ABARE) is Australia's largest applied economic research agency.

We are looking for highly motivated graduates to join our multidisciplinary team of talented and innovative economists, mathematicians, statisticians and modellers who are at the leading edge of domestic and international economic research.

A degree, at honours level, in economics or related discipline, or a good double degree with strong economic content, from an Australian university or equivalent qualification is essential.

A career in research

Your contribution to ABARE's research program starts in a 'real' job from day one. We make sure that your knowledge and skills are developed by assigning you to a team of highly experienced research economists, statisticians and/or modellers.

We take steps to assist your professional development through access to formal training and encourage you to attend seminars on a variety of research topics. Our emphasis is on developing individual capacity for management and leadership and maintaining technical and research expertise.

Eligibility

To apply for an ABARE graduate position you must:

- Have completed your degree by January 2009
- Be an Australian citizen or be in the process of becoming an Australian citizen (you must hold Australian citizenship by the time you commence with ABARE).

Employment conditions

Our salaries and employment conditions are highly competitive and include:

- A starting salary of $49 574 (plus generous government funded superannuation)
- Performance based advancement within 12 months of commencement
- Flexible working hours and generous personal and recreation leave provisions
- Access to study assistance
- Assistance with relocation and travel costs to Canberra, as well as accommodation for your first 3 weeks for interstate appointments.

How to apply

Applications for our 2009 graduate intake are now open and close 30 April 2008.
